Question from Texan heading to DC for the cause.

posted 15 days ago by HoldthelineUSA2020 +16 / -0

We are flying into Baltimore and staying about 30 mins from the US Capital.

My question is, what areas can we park our rental cars and join the march, or whatever. Im getting the waiver, but would still like to avoid the car being smashed up.

I have never been to DC, but this is too important to stand by and do nothing while the CCP takeover and swamp creatures sell us out.....and the MSM so blatantly lies for, SMH.

Someone posted about things getting serious when an accountant from the burbs buys some Tac gloves and books a flight to DC because we are fed up with the BS they trying to pull that got me to action.

found this about the Covid19 test. Looks like the only thing they are going to be real dicks about are mask.

<https://www.bwiairport.com/COVID19>

Q3: Do we need to present proof of negative test at the airport?

A3: At this time, proof of negative testing does not have to be shown at the airport. However, we do recommend getting tested and having your negative results with you as you travel. As an alternative to testing, health officials advise self-quarantining for at least 10 days as long as you remain asymptomatic.

Q4: Will I be denied entry at the airport if I don't have a negative test to present?

A4: No. We advise passengers to abide by last week's directive from the Maryland Department of Health. Click here to read it in its entirety. State and local health departments are prepared to address violations. We recommend passengers get tested and having your negative results with you as you travel. A list of testing sites is viewable by clicking here.
